Barry Cahill is an independent scholar in Halifax. He is writing the biography of Carleton Stanley.

Susan Gelman holds a Ph.D. in the history of education from OISE. She is currently teaching secondary school in Toronto, and working as an independent scholar. Her most recent publication was in Framing Our Past: Canadian Women's History in the Twentieth Century.

Ulla Johansson is professor in the Department of Education, Umeå University. Recent publications include "Coming up to the standard: normalising practices in Swedish grammar schools, 1927-1960," History of Education Review 30, 1 (2001): 43-59; and "Education and social justice: gender lessons of the past," The International Journal of Inclusive Education 5, 2/3 (2001): 265-80.

Dans sa thèse de doctorat en sociologie de l'éducation, Louis LeVasseur s'est intéressé à l'évolution des programmes d'enseignement. Il occupe actuellement un poste de chercheur au Centre de recherche interuniversitaire sur la formation et la profession enseignantes (CRIFPE), où il mène une recherche sur la division du travail en milieu scolaire

Neil Sutherland studies at the University of British Columbia. His most recent publication, "Canadian Children in the Century of the Child, 1870s-2000," appears in the CD-ROM edited by Bob Hesketh and Chris Hackett, Canada: Confederation to the Present: An Interactive History of Canada (Edmonton: Chinook Multimedia, 2001). He is gradually transforming that article into a book for Cynthia Comacchio's Wilfrid Laurier University Press series on childhood and family history.
