

Historical Studies in Education / Revue d'histoire de l'éducation
CONTRIBUTORS / COLLABORATEURS

Contributors / Collaborateurs

Eric Farr is a doctoral candidate in the University of Toronto's Department for the Study of Religion. His research examines the interaction of religion and secularism in public education systems.

Brianna Lafoon is a doctoral candidate at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. She is pursuing a joint degree in history and educational policy studies. Her dissertation, "Island Chains: The American Imperial Education Web in the Early Twentieth Century," focuses on the reciprocal effects between American imperial schooling in Puerto Rico, the Philippines, and the mainland US. Prior to pursuing graduate studies, she was an educator in New York City public schools for ten years.

Rebecca Faye Ralph is a post-doctoral fellow at Memorial University of Newfoundland's Institute for Social and Economic Research, and is based in the Department of History. She is a historian of church-state relations and public education systems and is presently working on a book examining the history of Newfoundland and Labrador's denominational school system from 1836–1997. She can be reached at rebecca.ralph@mun.ca.